Question 1

Dear Diary,

Last month, our class was asked to prepare a science exhibition. At first, everyone was nervous because the project seemed too big. We had to design models, prepare posters, and explain our ideas to visitors.

We divided the work among ourselves. Some classmates worked on building the models, others prepared the charts, and I helped with the presentation. There were small disagreements, but we solved them by listening to each other.

On the day of the exhibition, everything went smoothly. I felt proud of our teamwork and realized that when everyone contributes, even a difficult task becomes possible. I learned that cooperation and patience are the keys to success.

Question 2

Dear Sarah,

I hope you are settling well in your new city. I really miss having you around in class. School feels different without you, especially during lunch breaks when we used to sit together.

Here, things are going fine. We recently had a sports day, and our team won the relay race. Everyone was cheering loudly, and I wished you were here to celebrate with us.

My advice for you is to join some clubs or activities in your new school. It will help you make friends quickly and feel more comfortable. Remember to stay confident and be yourself; people will appreciate you for who you are.

Take care, and write back soon.

Your friend,

Emily

Question 3

One festival I enjoy is the Mid-Autumn Festival. On that day, families gather together to celebrate. People wear casual clothes, but children often carry colorful lanterns shaped like animals or stars.

We eat mooncakes, which are sweet pastries filled with lotus seed paste or red bean. At night, families go outside to admire the bright full moon. Children play with lanterns, and some neighborhoods even organize dragon dances.

This festival is meaningful to me because it brings families together. It reminds us to be grateful for what we have and to enjoy time with loved ones. The glowing lanterns and the round moon always make the night feel magical.
